CIO Cloud Summit Enters Into Partnership with ERP.com

November 10, 2010 – The CIO Cloud Summit team is pleased to announce that it has formed a strategic partnership with ERP.com, an online gathering point for ERP professionals that features valuable information, product reviews, job and sales leads, and industry thought leadership.

ERP.com was founded in early 2009 by a group of former entrepreneurs, Fortune 500 executives, and ERP practitioners. The website offers up-to-date and relevant information on enterprise resource planning and acts as a forum for ERP professionals and businesses, allowing individuals to make new business contacts and network with peers. The site also offers information on enterprise software, a listing of ERP consultants, book reviews and a calendar of ERP events.

“ERP.com is a great resource for technology executives who want to learn more about enterprise resource planning. The site features a wide array of articles, reviews, free tools, and advice that will help technology executives successfully plan their next enterprise project. I am excited about our partnership with ERP.com and am happy to introduce this excellent site to our CIO and IT executive attendees,” said Glenn Willis, EVP, CIO Cloud Summit & CEO, CDM Media.

The CIO Cloud Summit is a unique opportunity for technology executives who are planning, implementing or have completed cloud computing projects to discuss the latest cloud topics and trends, including public and private cloud, cloud security, data control and accessibility, and privacy. The event’s strategic agenda includes think tanks, panel discussions, case studies and open forums as well as numerous networking opportunities.
